

Eric Nelson

About your Doctor.

I was born and raised on a farm in Williston North Dakota. The farm is where I learned hard work, compassion, and mechanics. After graduating Williston High School I worked for a roustabout and pipe line company where I further continued my real life knowledge of mechanics. During this time I attended Williston State College and Minot State University. I also continued to race motocross. Now my children and I all love to ride, race, and play hockey. I further continued my education at Northwestern Health Sciences University. This is where I earned my Doctorate in Chiropractic. This is not where my education ends. I believe that knowledge is always growing and improving, and I am determined to continue my knowledge and education as long as I can, in hopes of helping others.

Why I became a Chiropractor

I remember the moment quit vividly in Anatomy class where I said to myself that Anatomy is mechanics. Everything fits and works together for a reason. No matter whether it is mechanical, structural, hydraulic, pneumatic, or electric. I also have had a huge list of injuries myself between the motocross racing, hockey, and the farm. As a child I was also the farm kid that always thought I was bigger and stronger than I really was, so I was always finding good ways to injure myself. My family used a chiropractor frequently, and with my love of anatomy, my injuries, and my passion to help people, I knew that I needed to become a Chiropractor.

